UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON
AT SEATTLE

YOLANY PADILLA, et al.,

Plaintiffs,

v.

U.S. IMMIGRATION AND CUSTOMS ENFORCEMENT, et al.,

Defendants.

CASE NO. C18-928 MJP

ORDER ON MOTION TO DISMISS

The above-entitled Court, having received and reviewed:

1. Defendants’ Motion to Dismiss (Dkt. No. 36),
2. Plaintiffs’ Opposition to Defendants’ Motion to Dismiss (Dkt. No. 69),
3. Defendants’ Reply in Support of Motion to Dismiss (Dkt. No. 76), all attached declarations and exhibits, and relevant portions of the record, and having heard oral argument on the motion, rules as follows:

IT IS ORDERED that the motion is PARTIALLY GRANTED and PARTIALLY DENIED; Plaintiffs’ claims relating to violations of the Administrative Procedures Act are

1 DISMISSED with prejudice (except as to the claims of the Bond Hearing class for certain 2 procedural safeguards); the motion to dismiss the remainder of Plaintiffs' claims is DENIED.

3 Background

4 Plaintiffs bring this action against U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement ("ICE"), 5 the U.S. Department of Homeland Security ("DHS"), U.S. Customs and Border Protection 6 ("CBP"), U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services ("USCIS"), the Executive Office for 7 Immigration Review ("EOIR"), and various government officials in their official capacities 8 (collectively, the "government") challenging the legality of (1) "the government's policy or 9 practice of excessively prolonging the detention of asylum seekers placed in expedited removal 10 proceedings by failing to promptly provide them their credible fear interview and 11 determination," and (2) "the government's related policy or practice of excessively prolonging 12 the detention of asylum seekers by failing to promptly conduct the bond hearings required by 13 federal law after an asylum seeker's positive completion of their credible fear interview." (See 14 Dkt. No. 26.)

15 I. Statutory / Regulatory Scheme

16 The statutes at issue in this litigation are 8 U.S.C. §§ 1225, 1226, and 1252. In general, 17 these statutes provide as follows:

18 If an immigration officer determines that an alien arriving in the U.S. is "inadmissible" 19 (as defined in § 1182), the alien is subject to removal without further hearing unless the alien 20 indicates an intention to apply for asylum or a fear of persecution. 8 U.S.C. § 1225(b)(1)(A)(i).
21 An alien indicating an intention to apply for asylum or a fear of persecution is referred for an 22 interview to determine whether he or she has a credible fear of persecution or torture if returned 23 to their home country (a "credible fear interview"). Id., § 1225(b)(1)(A)(ii). Any alien subject to 24

1 this process “shall be detained pending a final determination of credible fear of persecution.”

2 Id., § 1225(b)(1)(B)(iii)(IV).

3 An asylum officer conducts the credible fear interview. If the officer determines that the 4 alien has a credible fear of persecution, “the alien shall be detained for further consideration of 5 the application for asylum.” Id., § 1225(b)(1)(B)(i), (ii). Aliens awaiting either a credible fear 6 interview or “further consideration of the application for asylum” are included in the category of 7 aliens “pending a decision on whether the alien is to be removed” and are detained pursuant to § 8 1226(a). Aliens awaiting further consideration of an application for asylum may be eligible for a 9 custody determination by DHS and then a bond hearing before an immigration judge (“IJ”). 8 10 C.F.R. § 1003.19(h)(2).<sup>1</sup>

11 Every alien detained pursuant to § 1226(a) is individually considered for release on bond 12 by an ICE officer and served with a custody determination form. Id., § 236.1(c)(8). If bond is 13 denied or the detainee believes bond is set too high, he or she may request a “redetermination” of 14 the custody decision by an IJ. Id., §§ 236.1(d)(1), 1003.19, 1236.1(d)(1). At the bond hearing 15 the alien has the burden of proving that he or she is not a flight risk or a danger to the 16 community.

17 The IJ’s decision may be appealed to the Board of Immigration Appeals (“BIA”). Id., § 18 236.1(d)(3)(i), 1236.1(d)(3)(i). The bond hearings are not usually recorded, but upon appeal, the 19 IJ will prepare a written memorandum outlining the grounds for the decision.

20 II. The Named Plaintiffs

21 The named plaintiffs in this action are persons seeking asylum in the United States: 22

24 <sup>1</sup> The statutes contain no time periods within which either the credible fear interview or bond hearing must be held.

- 1 • Yolany Padilla: Shortly after her apprehension for illegal entry into the United States
2 on May 16, 2018, Ms. Padilla expressed a fear of being removed to her native
3 Honduras. (Dkt. No. 26, Second Amended Complaint (“SAC”) at ¶ 40.) Six weeks 4 after her entry, she was interviewed by an asylum officer and was found to have a 5 credible fear, at which point she became eligible for a bond hearing. She was granted 6 a bond hearing two days after her credible fear determination. (Id. at ¶ 66.) Ms.
7 Padilla was awarded bond and was released on July 6, 2018, after this lawsuit was 8 filed. (Id. at ¶¶ 66, 115.)
- 9 • Ibis Guzman: Ms. Guzman is also from Honduras and underwent a similar process to 10 Ms. Padilla, but was denied bond. (Id. at ¶¶ 32, 99.) She reserved appeal, but was 11 released by ICE in late July 2018. (Id. at ¶ 119.)
- 12 • Bianca Orantes: Shortly after her apprehension for illegal entry into the United 13 States, Ms. Orantes expressed a fear of returning to her native El Salvador. (Id. at ¶ 14 44.) About five weeks following her entry, she was interviewed by an asylum officer 15 and found to have a credible fear. (Id. at ¶ 102.) She was granted a bond hearing 16 eleven days after her credible fear determination but was denied bond. Ms. Orantes 17 reserved appeal, but was released on July 24, 2018. (Id. at ¶¶ 121, 123.)
- 18 • Baltazar Vasquez: Shortly after his apprehension for illegal entry into the United 19 States, Mr. Vasquez expressed a fear of returning to his native El Salvador. (Id. at ¶ 20 46.) About eight weeks after his entry, he was interviewed by an asylum officer and 21 found to have a credible fear. (Id. at ¶ 108.) He was granted a bond hearing three 22 weeks after his credible fear determination. Mr. Vasquez stipulated to an $8,000 23 bond, waived appeal of the bond order, and was released. (Id. at ¶ 125.)

24 Plaintiffs seek injunctive and declaratory relief and seek to certify the following classes:

- 1 • Credible Fear Interview Class: “All detained asylum seekers in the United States
2 subject to expedited removal proceedings under 8 U.S.C. §1225(b) who are not provided 3 a credible fear determination within 10 days of requesting asylum or expressing a fear of 4 persecution to a DHS official.” (Id. at 30.)
- 5 • Bond Hearing Class: “All detained asylum seekers who entered the United States 6 without inspection, were initially subject to expedited removal proceedings under 8 7 U.S.C. §1225(b), were determined to have a credible fear of persecution, but are not 8 provided a bond hearing with a verbatim transcript or recording of the hearing within 7 9 days of requesting a bond hearing.” (Id. at 31.)

10 Plaintiffs filed their complaint on June 25, 2018 (Dkt. No. 1) and their SAC (Dkt. No. 26) 11 on August 22, 2018. The SAC focuses on the following claims:

- 12 • Count I (Violation of Due Process): Both the Credible Fear Interview and Bond 13 Hearing classes claim violations of their due process rights springing from their detention 14

1 for “an unreasonable time” awaiting their credible fear interview and, post-credible fear 2 determination, their bond hearing. They seek as remedies (1) a ten-day deadline for the 3 credible fear interview and (2) a bond hearing within seven days of request, where the 4 government bears the burden of proof and where detainees are provided a verbatim 5 transcript of the hearing.

- 6 • Count II (Administrative Procedure Act): Both classes allege that their credible fear 7 interviews and bond hearings are being “unreasonably delayed” and held without 8 “appropriate procedural safeguards” in violation of the Administrative Procedure Act 9 (“APA”), 5 U.S.C. § 706.
- 10 • Count III (Violation of Asylum Statute): The government asserts, and Plaintiffs 11 conceded at oral argument, that Plaintiffs have abandoned this claim by virtue of their 12 failure to contest the government’s arguments for dismissal.

13 The government now moves to dismiss each of these claims. (Dkt. No. 36.)

14 Discussion

15 I. Standard of Review

16 Under Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6), the Court may dismiss a complaint for "failure to state a 17 claim upon which relief can be granted." In ruling on a motion to dismiss, the Court must 18 construe the complaint in the light most favorable to the non-moving party. Livid Holdings Ltd.
19 v. Salomon Smith Barney, Inc., 416 F.3d 940, 946 (9th Cir. 2005). The Court must accept all 20 well-pleaded allegations of material fact as true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of 21 the plaintiff. Wylar Summit P’ship v. Turner Broad. Sys., 135 F.3d 658, 661 (9th Cir. 1998).

22 Dismissal is appropriate where a complaint fails to allege "enough facts to state a claim to 23 relief that is plausible on its face." Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570 (2007). A 24 claim is plausible on its face "when the plaintiff pleads factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged." Ashcroft
v. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1949 (2009). As a result, a complaint must contain "more than labels

1 and conclusions, and a formulaic recitation of the elements of a cause of action will not do."
2 Twombly, 550 U.S. at 555.

3 II. Credible Fear Interview Claims

4 A. Jurisdiction

5 The government first claims that this Court lacks jurisdiction over Plaintiffs' claims 6 challenging the timing of the credible fear interviews under 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(A). To be 7 clear, the legislation is replete with subsections limiting judicial review of the government's 8 actions under the statute. See 8 U.S.C. § 1252(a)(2)(iv), § 1252(b)(9), § 1252(e)(1), § 9 1252(e)(3). However, the Court finds that judicial review of the government's policies and 10 practices under this statutory scheme is permissible based upon a line of cases which have 11 wound through the Ninth Circuit and the U.S. Supreme Court, culminating in Rodriguez v.
12 Marin, ___ F.3d ___, 2018 WL 6164602 (9th Cir. Nov. 19, 2018).

13 The Rodriguez line of cases concerns a group of aliens who assert, on due process 14 grounds, that the statutory scheme embodied in §§ 1225 and 1226 does not authorize 15 "prolonged" detention without a bond hearing where the government would bear the burden of 16 proving, by clear and convincing evidence, that continued detention is justified. Jennings v.
17 Rodriguez, 138 S.Ct. 830, 839 (2018). While the Supreme Court would not countenance the 18 Ninth Circuit's use of "constitutional avoidance" to impose certain bond hearing procedural 19 requirements not contained in the statutes, it nevertheless had no difficulty in concluding that the 20 restrictive judicial review language of the statute "does not deprive us of jurisdiction." Id. at 21 840.

22 Like the Plaintiffs in this case, the Rodriguez petitioners "[were] not asking for review of 23 an order of removal. . . [were] not challenging the decision to detain them in the first place or to 24

1 seek removal; and . . . [were] not even challenging any part of the process by which their 2 removability will be determined.” Id. at 841. In the face of such a challenge, the Supreme Court 3 found no jurisdictional bar, as the statutory restrictions on judicial review cannot preclude a 4 challenge to the overall constitutionality of the legislation or whether it is being applied in a 5 constitutional fashion. Id. at 840. The Ninth Circuit followed suit on remand. See Rodriguez, 6 2018 WL 6164602. In light of what it identified as “vital constitutional issues,” the Ninth Circuit 7 was moved to remark that

8       We have grave doubts that any statute that allows for arbitrary prolonged 9       detention without any process is constitutional or that those who founded our 10       democracy precisely to protect against the government’s arbitrary deprivation of 11       liberty would have thought so. Arbitrary civil detention is not a feature of our 12       American government.

13 Id. at *3.

14       While Plaintiffs’ factual circumstances and the relief which they seek are not on all fours 15       with the petitioners in Rodriguez, the Court sees no difference between the two cases in terms of 16       the constitutional issue (“arbitrary prolonged detention”) at stake. While the outcome of the 17       litigation is not certain at this point, the Court’s jurisdiction to consider the claims of the 18       Credible Fear Interview class “contesting the constitutionality of the entire statutory scheme 19       under the Fifth Amendment,” Jennings, 138 S.Ct. at 841, is not in question.

20       The Court recognizes that the existence of Fifth Amendment issues does not, by itself, 21       confer jurisdiction upon it to hear Plaintiffs’ claims. However, Plaintiffs here seek habeas relief 22       for their alleged injuries and “[i]t is now clear that ‘federal district court has habeas jurisdiction 23       under 28 U.S.C. §2241 to review’” complaints by detained aliens “for constitutional claims and 24       legal error. Although [the immigration statutory scheme] restricts jurisdiction in the federal courts in some respects, it does not limit habeas jurisdiction over constitutional claims or

1 questions of law." Leonardo v. Crawford, 646 F.3d 1157, 1160 (9th Cir. 2011)(citing V. Singh 2 v. Holder, 638 F.3d 1196, 1200, 1202 (9th Cir. 2011)).

3 B. Constitutional Rights

4 In addition to challenging jurisdiction, the government also asserts that, as “non-admitted 5 aliens,” the members of the Credible Fear Interview class have no constitutional right to enter the 6 United States or have the determination of their admissibility subject to any procedural 7 safeguards other than those Congress has seen fit to provide. The issue of whether and to what 8 extent Plaintiffs have any due process rights is dependent on how their status is characterized; 9 simply put, are they “excludable aliens” with little or no due process rights, or are they aliens 10 who are in the country illegally, but nevertheless in the country such that their presence entitles 11 them to certain constitutional protections?

12 There is a string of cases stretching from the 1950s to the present concerning what are 13 known as “excludable aliens” – defined as “those who seek admission but have not been granted 14 entry into the United States.” Garcia-Mir v. Smith, 766 F.2d 1478, 1484 (11th Cir. 1985). As 15 the Ninth Circuit has stated:

16 The Supreme Court has consistently recognized that ‘our immigration laws have 17 long made a distinction between those aliens who have come to our shores 18 seeking admission . . . and those who are within the United States after an entry, 19 irrespective of its legality. In the latter instance, the Court has recognized 20 additional rights and privileges not extended to those in the former category who 21 are merely ‘on the threshold of initial entry.’ [ ] In Mezei, the Supreme Court 22 noted that ‘aliens who have once passed through our gates, even illegally, may be 23 expelled only after proceedings conforming to traditional standards of fairness 24 encompassed in due process of law.’ An excludable alien, however, has no procedural due process rights regarding his admission or exclusion and thus ‘stands on a different footing: ‘Whatever the procedure authorized by Congress is, it is due process as far as an alien denied entry is concerned.’ . . . However, once an alien gains admission to our country and begins to develop the ties that go with permanent residence, his constitutional status changes accordingly.

Barrera-Echavarria v. Rison, 44 F.3d 1441, 1448-49 (9th Cir. 1995) (citations omitted).

1 This principle has given rise to the “entry fiction,” a legal concept which holds that 2 “excludable aliens,” “[e]ven if physically present in this country, . . . are legally detained at the 3 border” and treated as if they have not entered the country. Garcia-Mir, supra at 1484.

4 However, there is also Supreme Court precedent that “once an individual has entered the 5 country, he is entitled to the protection of the Due Process Clause.” United States v. Raya-Vaca, 6 771 F.3d 1195, 1202 (9th Cir. 2014)(emphasis in original). This concept is reflected in the line 7 of cases following Zadvydas v. Davis, 533 U.S. 678 (2001), where the Supreme Court 8 differentiated between aliens “seeking entry” into the United States and those already within our 9 borders:

10 The distinction between an alien who has effected an entry into the United States 11 and one who has never entered runs throughout immigration law. . . . [O]nce an 12 alien enters the country, [his/her] legal circumstance changes, for the Due Process 13 Clause applies to all “persons” within the United States, including aliens, whether 14 their presence here is lawful, unlawful, temporary, or permanent.

15 Zadvydas, 533 U.S. at 693.

16 The government argues that Plaintiffs are “excludable” aliens with no inherent due 17 process rights; Plaintiffs naturally argue that they are “Raya-Vaca aliens,” detained after crossing 18 over the border of this country and therefore entitled to a wider array of constitutional 19 protections. The factual allegations regarding the entry circumstances of each Plaintiff are as 20 follows:

- 21 • Ms. Padilla “crossed the U.S.-Mexico border” and was arrested as she was “making her 22 way to the closest Port of Entry.” (SAC, ¶ 40.)
- 23 • Ms. Guzman “crossed the U.S.-Mexico border” and was arrested by a CBP agent. (Id. at 24 ¶ 42.)
- Ms. Orantes “crossed the U.S.-Mexico border . . . immediately walked to the CBP station to request asylum,” and was arrested. (Id. at ¶ 44.)

- 1 • Mr. Vasquez “crossed the U.S.-Mexico border” and was arrested by a CBP agent. Id. at ¶ 2 46.)

3 Faced with a motion to dismiss, this Court must accept all well-plead allegations of 4 material fact as true and draw all reasonable inferences in favor of the plaintiff. Wylter, 135 F.3d 5 at 661. Under this standard, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs have adequately plead that they 6 were within the borders of this country without permission when detained, and thus enjoy 7 inherent constitutional due process protections which they are entitled to vindicate through the 8 legal process. The Court will not dismiss Plaintiffs’ claims on the grounds that they do not have 9 a right to the constitutional protections they seek. Defendants’ motion in this regard is DENIED.

10 C. Credible Fear Claims Under the APA

11 The scope of review under the APA is described at 5 U.S.C. § 706, which states:

12 To the extent necessary to decision and when presented, the reviewing court shall 13 decide all relevant questions of law, interpret constitutional and statutory 14 provisions and determine the meaning or applicability of the terms of an agency 15 action. The review court shall—

- 16 (1) compel agency action unlawfully withheld or unreasonably delayed; and 17 18 (2) hold unlawful and set aside agency action, findings, and conclusions found to 19 be—20 (A) arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in 21 accordance with law;
22 (B) contrary to constitutional right, privilege, or immunity 23 (C) in excess of statutory jurisdiction, authority, or limitations, or short of 24 statutory right;
(D) without observance of procedure required by law;
(E) unsupported by substantial evidence in a case subject to sections 556 and 557 of this title or otherwise reviewed on the record of an agency hearing provided by statute; or
(F) unwarranted by the facts to the extent that the facts are subject to trial de novo by the reviewing court.

Plaintiffs bring their claims under § 706(1) and § 706(2)(A) and (B).

1                   1. Unreasonable Delay (§ 706(1))

2                   The Court questions whether the issue of “unreasonable delay” is amenable to resolution 3 by class action lawsuit, as, absent a statutory deadline, the factors which go into a decision of 4 when to schedule an interview are highly specific and will require individualized factual 5 inquiries to determine their “reasonableness.” See Diop v. ICE/Homeland Sec., 656 F.3d 221, 6 233 (3rd Cir. 2011) (“[The determination of the point at which a delay becomes ‘unreasonable’] 7 will necessarily be a fact-dependent inquiry that will vary depending on individual 8 circumstances. We decline to establish a universal point at which [it] will always be considered 9 unreasonable.”); see also Sopo v. U.S. Att’y Gen., 825 F.3d 1199, 1215 (11th Cir. 2016), vacated 10 on unrelated grounds, 890 F.3d 952 (11th Cir. 2018)<sup>2</sup> (“[R]easonableness, by its very nature is a 11 fact-dependent inquiry requiring an assessment of all the circumstances of any given case.’ A 12 bright-line approach strips away the essence of a reasonableness standard.”). Aside from arguing 13 that there is no Ninth Circuit authority discouraging determinations of “reasonableness” on a 14 class-wide basis, Plaintiffs have no response to the rationale enunciated by the Third and 15 Eleventh Circuits in finding that “reasonableness” in this context is not amenable to class-wide 16 resolution.

17                   The government also contends that Plaintiffs fail to state a claim for relief under § 706(1) 18 because they have no “live” claims (i.e., they all have been provided with credible fear 19 interviews and released from detention). But “inherently transitory” claims such as those 20 presented by Plaintiffs will not be defeated by such a defense as long as any member of the class 21 still has standing to bring the claim. Sosna v. Iowa, 419 U.S. 393, 402 (1975) (“The controversy 22

23                   <sup>2</sup> The case was vacated by stipulation when appellant’s removal rendered his appeal moot; its holdings are still valid 24 legal precedent.

1 may exist, however, between a named defendant and a member of the class represented by the 2 named plaintiff, even though the claim of the named plaintiff has become moot.”).

3 Nevertheless, the Court is persuaded that the reasonableness or unreasonableness of 4 delay is not suitable to resolution by means of class action. Accordingly, Defendants’ motion to 5 dismiss Plaintiffs’ 706(1) claim is GRANTED.

6 2. No Final Agency Action (§ 706(2))

7 Unless an agency’s actions are made reviewable by statute, they are only reviewable if 8 they are a “final agency action.” 5 U.S.C. § 704. See Norton v. S. Utah Wilderness Alliance, 9 542 U.S. 55, 61-62 (2004); Navajo Nation v. Dept. of the Interior, 876 F.3d 1144, 1171 (9th Cir.
10 2017). Whether an agency action is “final” is determined by two factors: (1) whether it 11 “mark[s] the ‘consummation’ of the agency’s decisionmaking process,” and (2) whether the 12 action is “one by which ‘rights or obligations have been determined,’” or from which “legal 13 consequences will flow.” Bennett v. Spear, 520 U.S. 154, 177-78 (1977).

14 The government contends that there is no “final agency action” at issue in this lawsuit, 15 thus no cause of action under the APA. Plaintiffs make the following arguments:

16 First, Plaintiffs contend that the credible fear interview marks the culmination of a 17 decision-making process (i.e., because once the interview is concluded, the matter is transferred 18 from DHS to EOIR). While this may be the case, Plaintiffs are not seeking a review of the 19 outcome of a credible fear interview but are instead challenging the timing of the interview itself.
20 When the interview is held does not mark the culmination of any decision-making process.

21 Second, Plaintiffs contend that the credible fear interview is a process by which rights are 22 determined and from which legal consequences flow. Again, this is correct with regard to the 23 interview itself (as the decision following the interview will determine whether the applicant will 24

1 be able to apply for relief from the immigration court or be subject to expedited removal), but 2 inapplicable to the question of when the interview is conducted.

3 Defendants' motion to dismiss the claim of the Credible Fear Interview class under the 4 APA is GRANTED.

5 III. Bond Hearing Claims

6 Plaintiffs' claims regarding the bond hearings fall into two categories: (1) the demand for 7 a hearing within seven days of request and (2) the demand for greater procedural rights (i.e., 8 verbatim transcripts or recordings of every hearing, written findings, and that the burden of proof 9 be shifted to the government). (SAC at ¶¶ 148, 151-152, 163-165.)

10 A. Constitutional Claims

11 As an initial matter, the Court is not persuaded by the government's arguments that the 12 Bond Hearing class has failed to state a claim for relief on constitutional grounds. After 13 reviewing the regulations surrounding the bond hearing process, the government simply asserts 14 that it provides "ample process" and that, in the absence of a statutory deadline,

15 leaving scheduling determinations to the immigrations courts appropriately 16 balances the immigration courts' interest in docket management while allowing 17 them the flexibility to adapt to fluctuations in cases and to make prioritization 18 decisions. Given these considerations, and the fact-specific inquiry required for 19 Plaintiffs' due process (and related APA challenges), they cannot state a claim for 20 an unbending seven-day bond hearing rule.

21 (Dkt. No. 36 at 15.) This argument is made without analysis or case citation.

22 To the contrary, a plethora of district court and Board of Immigration Appeals cases 23 affirm the requirement of a "prompt" or "expeditious" bond hearing for immigrants seeking 24 entry. See, e.g., Matter of Chirinos, 16 I&N Dec. 276, 277 (BIA 1977); Matter of Valles-Perez, 21 I& Dec. 769, 772 (BIA 1997); Saravia v. Sessions, 280 F. Supp. 3d 1168, 1177 (N.D. Cal.

1 2017). The Court is not required at this stage to determine the reasonableness of the precise time
2 limit Plaintiffs seek to impose on the bond hearing process in order to find that they have rights 3 to adjudicate, and will not dismiss their claims on this ground.

4           With respect to their other due process claims concerning the bond hearing procedure, 5 Plaintiffs have provided no support for their assertion that the government should bear the 6 burden of proof in the bond hearing, or that the Bond Hearing class members are entitled to a 7 “presumption of release”. They simply state that “placing the burden of continued detention on 8 DHS and restoring the presumption of release is consistent with Congressional intent.” (Dkt.
9 No. 69 at 17.) While Plaintiffs allude to briefing in their pending motion for a preliminary 10 injunction which allegedly supports this position, the Court is not inclined to permit Plaintiffs to 11 evade the page limitations by incorporating arguments from other motions by reference. By 12 contrast, the government presents several paragraphs laying out how and why the burden of 13 proof shifted from the government to the applicant following the adoption of the Illegal 14 Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996 (IIRIRA). (Dkt. No. 36 at 16-15 17.)

16           The Supreme Court’s 2018 opinion in Jennings provides further support for the 17 government’s position: Jennings overturned Ninth Circuit decision ordering the government to 18 provide periodic bond hearings for detained immigrants at which the government bore the 19 burden of proving by clear and convincing evidence that continued detention was necessary.
20 Jennings, 138 S.Ct at 836. The Supreme Court observed in that opinion that “[n]othing in § 21 1226(a)’s text . . . even remotely supports the imposition of either of those requirements.” Id. at 22 847.

1 With respect to Plaintiffs' demand for transcripts and/or recordings and a "particularized" 2 written finding in bond hearings, the government points out that while 8 U.S.C. § 1229a(b)(4)(C) 3 specifically requires a "complete record . . . of all testimony and evidence produced" in removal 4 hearings, there is no equivalent requirement in the statute for preliminary, non-removal hearings 5 including bond determinations.<sup>3</sup>

6 However, the due process requirements of the Constitution compel certain procedures 7 regardless of whether they are or are not included in a statute. The Ninth Circuit has already 8 found a Fifth Amendment requirement for a contemporaneous record of a bond hearing in 9 similar circumstances:

10 [W]e agree that due process requires a contemporaneous record of [immigration 11 bond] hearings and that the memorandum decision presently provided is 12 insufficient. We hold that, in lieu of providing a transcript, the immigration court 13 may record [] hearings and make the audio recordings available for appeal upon 14 request. Although we determine that such audio recordings satisfy due process, 15 and are feasible for the government to provide, we do not decide whether they are 16 the only constitutionally adequate alternative to transcripts.

17 Singh v. Holder, 638 F.3d 1196, 1208 (9th Cir. 2011). As discussed in the preceding section 18 concerning the Credible Fear Interview class, Plaintiffs are entitled to certain constitutional 19 protections simply by virtue of their presence within this country. At this stage, the Court does 20 not determine whether the particular remedies they seek are constitutionally supported, but will 21 allow Plaintiffs to move forward with their claims of constitutional due process violations in the 22 bond hearing procedure.

23 <sup>3</sup> The government goes on to claim that, because "[t]he Supreme Court has declined to impose a contemporaneous 24 verbatim record requirement on criminal trials," the Court should not do so in immigration custody redetermination hearings. (Dkt. No. 36 at 18 (emphasis in original).) The problem with this argument is that every case cited in support of this proposition says the opposite: that indigent defendants must be provided with "a record of sufficient completeness" (Coppedge v. United States, 369 U.S. 438, 446 (1962) for an appeal or "a complete transcript of the proceedings at trial." United States v. Carrillo, 902 F.2d 1405, 1409 (9th Cir. 1990).

1 Defendants' motion to dismiss the constitutional claims of the Bond Hearing Class is 2 DENIED.

3 B. Administrative Procedures Act (APA)

4 1. Unreasonable Delay (§ 706(1))

5 As with the bond hearing claims, the government argues that the issue of "unreasonable 6 delay" is not amenable to resolution on a class-wide basis because there is no "uniform" 7 unreasonable delay, and the length of any delay necessarily requires an individualized inquiry.

8 The government cites to a D.C. Circuit opinion for the holding that "whether the delay. . .
9 should be deemed 'unreasonable' . . . cannot be decided in the abstract, . . . but will depend in 10 large part, as we have said, upon the complexity of the task at hand, the significance (and 11 permanence) of the outcome, and the resources available to the agency." Mashpee Wampanoag 12 Tribal Council, Inc. v. Norton, 336 F.3d 1094, 1102 (D.C. Cir. 2003). Plaintiffs counter that they 13 are not requesting a decision "in the abstract," but rather a decision based on an analysis of the 14 factors set forth in Telecomms. Res. & Action v. FCC, 750 F.2d 70 (D.C. Cir. 1984) ("TRAC").<sup>4</sup> 15 Those factors, which courts consider in determining whether an agency's delay is "so egregious 16 as to warrant mandamus," include:

17 (1) the time agencies take to make decisions must be governed by a "rule of 18 reason;" (2) where Congress has provided a timetable or other indication of the 19 speed with which it expects the agency to proceed in the enabling statute, that 20 statutory scheme may supply content for this rule of reason; (3) delays that might 21 be reasonable in the sphere of economic regulation are less tolerable when human 22 health and welfare are at stake; (4) the court should consider the effect of expediting delayed action on agency activities of a higher or competing priority;
(5) the court should also take into account the nature and extent of the interests prejudiced by the delay; and (6) the court need not find any impropriety lurking behind agency lassitude in order to hold that agency action is unreasonably delayed.

23 _____
24 <sup>4</sup> Once again, Plaintiffs refer the Court to their motion for a preliminary injunction motion for analysis of these factors, and once again, the Court will not consider argument from other pleadings incorporated by reference.

1 Id. at 80 (internal quotations omitted). Because any analysis of these factors, as well as analysis
2 of the “reasonableness” of delay, will necessarily require individualized inquiry, the Court finds 3 the § 706(1) claim incapable of class-wide resolution.

4 While Plaintiffs do cite to other cases where a TRAC analysis has been employed in the 5 class action context, these cases are distinguishable from this matter in that both involved an 6 agency’s failure to meet regulatory deadlines. See Roshandel v. Chertoff, Case No. C07-7 1739MJP, 2008 WL 1969646(W.D. Wash. May 5, 2008); Rosario v. USCIS, Case No. C15-8 813JLR, 2017 WL 3034447 at *9-10 (W.D. Wash. July 18, 2017)<sup>5</sup>.

9 In the instant case, the absence of any firm regulatory or statutory deadline will require 10 the Court to engage in individualized, fact-dependent inquiries of “reasonableness,” and such 11 necessity requires a finding that the Bond Hearing class has failed here to adequately state a 12 claim upon which relief can be granted. Defendants’ motion to dismiss this portion of the Bond 13 Hearing class’ claim is GRANTED.

14 2. No Final Agency Action (§ 706(2))

15 To state a claim under the APA with respect to their bond hearing claims, Plaintiffs must 16 establish the existence of a “final agency action” which “marks the ‘consummation’ of the 17 agency’s decisionmaking process” and either determines “rights or obligations” or from which 18 “legal consequences will flow.” Bennett v. Spear, 520 U.S. 154, 177-78 (1977).

19 With respect to the Bond Hearing class’ attempt to impose a deadline on the bond 20 hearings via the APA, the Court’s analysis tracks that of the identical request made by the 21

22
23 <sup>5</sup> “[A court] need not undertake TRAC’s six-factor balancing inquiry’ where a regulation imposes a firm deadline[.].
24 Accordingly, the court rejects Defendants’ argument that the individualized TRAC inquiry undermines commonality.” Id. at *10.

1 Credible Fear Interview class. The timing of the bond hearing does not represent a “final agency 2 action” and Plaintiffs cannot adequately state a claim for this particular relief under that statute.

3 The same cannot be said of the Bond Hearing Class’ claim that failure to accord them 4 certain procedural safeguards violates the APA. While the government argues that there is no 5 “policy” with respect to either the timing of the bond hearing or the procedural rights accorded to 6 bond applicants, and therefore no determination of rights or obligations and no “final agency 7 action,” the Court disagrees, and concludes that its practice of placing the burden of proof on 8 detainees<sup>6</sup> and not providing either a verbatim record nor particularized written findings for each 9 hearing constitute a “policy” for purposes of this claim.<sup>7</sup> The procedural defects alleged by the 10 Bond Hearing class are part and parcel of the bond hearing, which is indisputably a “final agency 11 action” from which legal consequences flow. If Plaintiffs can establish that these alleged defects 12 violate their constitutional rights, they are entitled to relief under the APA.

13 Defendants’ motion to dismiss the claim of the Bond Hearing class under § 706(2) of the 14 APA will be GRANTED IN PART (with respect to the timing of the bond hearing) and DENIED 15 IN PART (with respect to the procedural rights which Plaintiffs seek to impose via this cause of 16 action).

17 IV. Asylum Statutes (§ 1225(b)(1), § 1158(a)(1), 8 C.F.R. §§ 235.3(b)(4), 208.30, 18 1003.42)

19 Plaintiffs indicated at oral argument their intent to abandon this claim, therefore 20 Defendants’ motion to dismiss this claim is GRANTED.

21 <sup>6</sup> The Court also is not persuaded by the government’s claim that the burden of proof standards are set by statute, not 22 by agency action. In Jennings, the Supreme Court noted the absence of any requirement in § 1226(a) regarding the burden of proof, and its rationale does not defeat Plaintiffs’ claim. 138 S.Ct. at 847-48.

23 <sup>7</sup> Plaintiffs cite BIA case law (Chirinos, supra), EOIR Operating Policies and Procedures Memorandum, and Ninth 24 Circuit precedent that “[a]gency action . . . need not be in writing to be final and judicially reviewable.” R.I.L.-R v.
Johnson, 80 F. Supp. 3d 164, 184 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (citing Venetian Casino Resort LLC v. EEOC, 530 F.3d 925, 929 (D.C. Cir. 2008)).

1       V.       Injunctive Relief

2           The government points to § 1252(f)(1)'s "Limit on injunctive relief":

3           Regardless of the nature of the action or claim or of the identity of the party or 4           parties bringing the action, no court (other than the Supreme Court) shall have 5           jurisdiction or authority to enjoin or restrain the operation of the provisions of 6           chapter 4 of title II [8 USCS §§ 1121 et seq.] . . . other than with respect to the 7           application of such provisions to an individual alien against whom proceedings 8           under such chapter have been initiated.

9           The government argues that this language bars the injunctive relief sought by Plaintiffs. The 10          Court disagrees. Plaintiffs are not asking the Court to "enjoin or restrain the operation of the 11          provisions" of any statute, but instead seek an injunction against actions and policies that violate 12          those statutes and associated constitutional protections. There are a number of cases holding that 13          § 1252(f) does not bar class-wide relief in this situation. See Rodriguez v. Hayes, 591 F.3d 14          1105, 1120 (9th Cir. 2010) ("Section 1252(f) prohibits only injunction of 'the operation of' the 15          detention statutes, not injunction of a violation of the statutes . . ."); see also Damus v. Nielsen, 16          313 F. Supp. 3d 317, 328 (D.D.C. 2018); Johnson, 80 F. Supp. 3d at 184; Abdi v. Duke, 280 F.
17          Supp. 3d 373, 409 (W.D.N.Y. 2017) ("Where, as here, the moving party does not seek to enjoin 18          the operation of §§ 1221-1231, and instead, seeks to enjoin violations of the statutory and 19          regulatory framework, the class-wide prohibition on injunctive relief is inapplicable.") (internal 20          quotation marks omitted).

21          The government does not argue that Plaintiffs are not entitled to class-wide declaratory 22          relief.

23          Defendants' request for dismissal of Plaintiffs claims for injunctive and declaratory relief 24          is DENIED.

Conclusion

The Court has jurisdiction to hear Plaintiffs' lawsuit. Both the proposed Credible Fear Interview and Bond Hearing classes have succeeded in stating a claim under Count I for constitutional relief from certain alleged violations by Defendants, and Defendants' motion will be DENIED in that regard. The Credible Fear Interview class has failed to state a claim under the APA for which relief may be granted, and Defendants' motion to dismiss is GRANTED in that regard.

The Bond Hearing class has failed to state a claim for which relief may be granted under § 706(1) or § 706(2) of the APA concerning the timing of their bond hearings; Defendants' motion to dismiss is GRANTED in that regard. The Bond Hearing class has succeeded in stating a claim for which relief may be granted under § 706(2) of the APA concerning the procedural safeguards (i.e., burden of proof, provision of a verbatim transcript, written findings) to which they allege they are entitled; Defendants' motion is DENIED in that regard.

It is the further finding of this Court that Plaintiffs are entitled to seek injunctive and declaratory relief for the causes of action which they have successfully plead. Defendants' motion is DENIED in that regard as well.

The clerk is ordered to provide copies of this order to all counsel.

Dated December 11, 2018.

The Honorable Marsha J. Pechman
United States Senior District Court Judge
